```
1
        As human beings, our perception of time has grown out 11
2
   of a natural series of rhythms that are linked to daily, 22
   monthly, and yearly cycles. No matter how much we live by 3
                                                                     34
   our wristwatches, our bodies and our lives will always be 4
                                                                     46
   somewhat influenced by an internal clock. What is of even 5
                                                                     58
   greater interest, however, are our perceptions of our usage
                                                                     70
6
7
   of time.
                                                                     72
8
        Rhythm and tempo are ways we relate to time, and both 83
9
   are discerning features of a culture. In some cultures, 94
   folks move very slowly; in others, they move quickly as the 106
   norm. Mixing the two types may cause uneasiness. People may 118
12 have trouble relating to each other because they are not in 130
   synchrony. To be synchronized with another person is to 141
   move in step with the person.
                                                                     147
         In general, Americans move at a fast tempo, although 15
                                                                     158
   there are regional exceptions. In business meetings, people 170
16
   tend to be impatient and want to resolve issues quickly.
17
                                                                     181
   They have been taught that it is best to come to the point 18
                                                                     193
   quickly and avoid vaqueness. Because American business 204
19
   works in a short time frame, prompt results are often of 20
                                                                     215
                                                                     225
21
   more interest than building lasting relationships.
22
        Time is the basic organizing system for events. Lead 236
   time varies quite a bit from one culture to the next. When 248
   you conduct business with people of other cultures, you 259
   must know just how much advance time is required for each 25
                                                                     271
   event. For instance, many corporate executives schedule 26
                                                                     282
   their time months in advance. They may consider requests 27
                                                                     293
28 at the last minute as poor planning.
                                                                     300
```

| 1 | 2 | 3 | 4 | 5 | 6 | 7 | 8 | 9 | 10 | 11 | 12