

1	Many people will think about changing careers several	11
2	times during the years in which they are actively part of	23
3	the workforce. Many employers are realizing that searching	35
4	for qualified workers is a task that is never finished. As	47
5	the business world expands and changes, employers as well	59
6	as potential workers are changing the way they search for	71
7	employees or new job opportunities.	78
8	Businesses do not have to limit their search for new	89
9	workers by placing advertisements in classified sections	100
10	of newspapers. Furthermore, workers who want to find a new	112
11	career do not have to pound the pavement to look for a more	124
12	challenging job. The World Wide Web is transforming the way	136
13	people work and the way they look for work.	145
14	Some career experts predict that up to nine out of ten	156
15	jobs will be filled by persons who will post their resumes	168
16	online. As many as three out of four companies presently	179
17	advertise job openings online as they search for new talent	191
18	to fill exciting new positions in their companies.	201
19	An online job search can provide quick and easy access	212
20	to a vast number of potential employers and workers. Using	224
21	this process to find an acceptable match can also be quite	236
22	overwhelming. The major job boards have search engines that	248
23	look for all the categories of posted jobs, searching for	260
24	matches by job type, salary, location, and key words in the	272
25	descriptions. Persons who use the job boards should visit	284
26	sites selectively and use their best judgment to find the	296
27	best possible match.	300
