

Chapter 32 Real Estate and Other Investment Options

Section 32.1 Real Estate

Reading Activity—Draw Parallels and Create a Table

Directions Read the excerpt from the textbook. Notice that the effect of the factors is not clearly stated, but it can be inferred. Also, the paragraph provides more detail about location than any of the other factors. Use the table to identify the general effect of each factor and offer additional detail that parallels the detail provided for location.

Several factors affect the value of a house including its size, condition, quality, and location. Location is especially important. The distance between your home and work, available public transportation, and the quality of your local school system and public services also affect a home's value.
